Explore the health and education programs serving Ugandan children through this intersession abroad course.

JHU students will be paired with students from Uganda’s Makerere University for a unique peer-to-peer learning experience. Students will learn about the strengths and challenges of urban and rural child health and education initiatives in Uganda.

After an orientation in Kampala, students will spend a week in a homestay near the Rakai Health Sciences Program, where they will focus on health and education in rural Uganda; then spend time in an urban setting in Kampala, the country’s capital, for hospital and school tours, guest lectures and student-driven site visits. The course will also incorporate a safari experience.

This class fulfills the Applied Experience requirement for Public Health Studies majors.
