Workshop Session I – Please select one. (9:30 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.)

1. Communication Competence Imperatives in Diverse-Cultural Environments
   Bagher Fardanesh, JHU SPSBE
   Communication competence is essential to the competitiveness of multinational corporations (MNC). This session explores the nature of communication breakdowns and their potential consequences. In addition, major barriers to effective communication will be identified and several guidelines minimizing misunderstanding will be offered.

2. Digital Storytelling: A Personal History
   Joan Friedman, JHU Homewood Student Affairs
   Adriene Breckenridge, JHU School of Arts & Sciences
   Patricia Kain, JHU School of Arts & Sciences
   Rosemary Varner Gaskins, JHU Homewood Student Affairs
   In January 2006, students from the Office of Multicultural Student Affairs Student Success Series participated in a unique collaboration between the Expository Writing Program and the Digital Media Center. The stories the students wrote were recorded and paired with images and sounds, creating compelling video portraits of multicultural families. You will hear about the class experience from both faculty and student points of view.

   Linda Fried, M.D., M.P.H., Professor and Chair, University Committee on the Status of Women
   Cathy J. Lebo, Ph.D., Assistant Provost for Institutional Research
   Lindsay Thompson, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Management and Director of Business Transitions and Leadership Ethics
   Francesca Dominici, Ph.D., Associate Professor and Chair of UCSW Subcommittee on Faculty
   Provost Knapp empanelled an institution-wide University Committee on the Status of Women, which has just submitted its final report to the Provost, President Brody and Vice President McGill. This session reports on the findings from that report as to the persistent gender-based obstacles for women faculty, staff and students across the University, and presents recommendations for short and long-term interventions to correct these inequities. Significant cultural change, as well as corrections of policies and practices, will be required. Both approaches and outcomes will be beneficial to women of all backgrounds, as well as to the University community at large. The approaches also mirror the recently published report of the National Academy of Sciences (NAS), and offer the next generation approaches to establishing gender equity that the NAS has called for. The proposed interventions would place Johns Hopkins at the forefront of innovation on equity for women, and may provide new models for correction of discriminatory practices and experiences for all groups.

4. The Diversity Pipeline: Achieving and Maintaining Diversity in the Workplace
   Ashley J. Llorens, JHU Applied Physics Lab
   Andre Smith, JHU Applied Physics Lab
   What happens when the demographics in the workplace do not match that of the population at large? What can organizations do to achieve and maintain the appropriate ethnic and gender balance? Learn a holistic, “pipeline” approach that involves community outreach, diversity hiring practices and staff development.

   Norma McCaig, Chair, Global Nomads International
   Global nomads (aka Third-Culture Kids or TCK’s) are individuals who have lived abroad because of a parent’s occupational choice where their arena of acculturati the global corridor. This session will explore their experiences and ways their early-acquired global awareness and cross-cultural skills can be applied.

6. Conflict Resolution: Looking at the Facts
   David R. Thomas, JHU SPSBE
   Do you act differently in times of conflict and non-conflict times? Upon what assumptions is your style of interaction based? Participants in this session will be challenged to think a situation through thoroughly, obtain the facts before reapproaching and understand their assumptions.

7. Diversity – Inclusion Improves Your Organization’s Bottom Line
   Paul Lawrence Vann, CEO, Laurel Wreath Communications Incorporated
   Diversity is a corporate asset that provides competitive advantage to the organization. Learn five key benefits of an inclusive organization. This session will also examine the stereotypes that exist in the workplace and how to breakdown taboos of talking about them.

8. Courageous Leadership: Advancing a Diversity Initiative (for Senior Managers)
   ABSTRACT FORTHCOMING

9. When Does Speech Become Harassment? The Intersection Between the Law of Harassment and Speech Rights
   Gerard St. Ours, JHU Homewood Campus
   How do you balance the obligation to maintain a campus that is free of racial, sexual, religious and other forms of harassment and the need to protect free speech and foster the robust exchange of ideas in an academic environment? This session will explore those two tensions and the challenges and opportunities they present.

WORKSHOP SESSION II – Please select one. (11:15 a.m. – 12:45 p.m.)

1. Communication Competence Imperatives in Diverse Cultural Environments
   Bagher Fardanesh, JHU SPSBE
   Communication competence is essential to the competitiveness of multinational corporations (MNC). This session will explore the nature of communication breakdowns and their potential consequences. In addition, major barriers to effective communication will be identified and several guidelines minimizing misunderstanding will be offered.

2. Identity Development in a Multicultural Environment
   Liliana Meneses, Research Associate, The George Washington University
   How does growing up in a multicultural environment influence one’s identity development? Using the Human development lens of Erikson (1980) and Marcia (1980), where each stage of development is associated with tasks that lead to the development of the next stage, Ms. Meneses will discuss her research on individuals who experienced the “third culture” phenomenon, and how they describe their sense of personal and professional identity among the different cultures in which they lived.

3. Talking About It: Starting Easy, Comfortable Dialogue about GLBT Issues
   Mark Shields, Director, Human Rights Campaign (HRC) Coming Out Project
   Last fall the HRC conducted a dual tracked research project that examined the barriers that keep gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender and straight people from speaking openly with one another about GLBT issues at home, at work, and in their communities.
Based on the findings, this session will provide people resources, tools and strategies for starting conversations way that puts people at ease, and creates respectful open dialogue.

4. Conflict Resolution: Looking at the Facts
David R. Thomas, JHU SPSBE
Do you act differently in times of conflict and non-conflict times? Upon what assumptions is your style of intera based?
Participants in this session will be challenged to think a situation through thoroughly, obtain the facts before rea
and understand their assumptions.

5. Diversity – Inclusion Improves Your Organization’s Bottom Line
Paul Lawrence Vann, CEO, Laurel Wreath Communications Incorporated
Diversity is a corporate asset that that provides competitive advantage to the organization. Learn five key bene of an inclusive organization. This session will also examine the stereotypes that exist in the workplace and how to breakdown taboos of talking about them.

6. Discrimination, Harassment and Retaliation: Natural Enemies to Successful Diversity Initiatives
Caroline Laguerre-Brown, Associate Director for Compliance & Conflict Resolution, JHU
Discrimination, harassment, and retaliation can violate civil rights laws by creating an intimidating, hostile or offensive environment. These issues greatly undermine positive efforts to promote diversity and inclusion. This workshop will help participants understand legal definitions, explore specific behaviors that could be volatile to civil rights laws, review the special responsibility of supervisors, and discuss resources available at JHU. In this session, special coverage will be given to a June 2006 United States Supreme Court case on retaliation.

7. Disability as a Multicultural and Diversity Component
Shonda McLaughlin, Programs Manager, American Association of People with Disabilities
Too often topics like disability are perceived as “special interest” topic. Though there are many ways to develop multicultural competency skills, participants in this session will learn three primary ways, according to research, to develop multicultural competency skills, regardless of disciplines. Furthermore, this session will provide an overview of disability awareness and its importance and discuss disability as a culture.

8. DLC Diversity Climate Survey
James Calvin, Associate Professor, Dept. of Management, JHU School of Professional Studies
The Johns Hopkins Institutions Diversity Leadership Council (DLC), in seeking to fulfill its charter from President Brody, initiated a broad and long consultative process to construct and implement a survey for the purpose of collecting data that would shed light on issues related to perceptions about diversity and workplace climate across the Johns Hopkins Institutions. At this session there will be a short presentation of data indicators, gleaned insights and impressions, and a discussion about considerations and potential next steps to be taken by the Johns Hopkins Institutions as follow-up from the sur

Jeffrey P. Jarosz, JHU Whiting School of Engineering
Engineering is an exciting and profitable career choice, but women and minorities (Blacks, Hispanics and Native severely underrepresented. There are ways to address this through traditional ways and through curriculum reform.
This session will explore how to include curricular innovations with a traditional engineering curriculum.