

Dear Faculty:

I am pleased to issue this call for nominations for the Johns Hopkins Award for Excellence in Faculty Mentoring, honoring a full- or part-time Johns Hopkins faculty member who has demonstrated an outstanding commitment to supporting and facilitating the development of early career and midcareer faculty.

Now in its second year, the award includes a $5,000 honorarium.

The award aims to recognize the full range of mentorship in the areas of academic support and career development, including scholarship, teaching, service, and leadership. The ideal candidate will have demonstrated excellence in helping mentees build relationships to achieve their specific professional goals, forge connections with internal and external networks of colleagues, and develop professional and intellectual independence.

Nominations from faculty members, including self-nominations will be accepted beginning March 1. Required materials must be submitted to facultyaffairs@jhu.edu by 5 p.m. on March 31.

Required materials for each nomination are:

- A letter nominating a current full- or part-time JHU faculty member, not to exceed three pages, addressing: (i) the rationale for the nomination; (ii) specific details regarding the nominee's mentoring activities; and (iii) the nominee's impact on mentees' academic/professional careers.
- The nominee's current curriculum vitae.
- A list of faculty who have been mentored by the nominee and their current professional titles and affiliations. The nominee ideally generates this list.
- Supporting letters from two to four faculty members (JHU and/or non-JHU faculty) who have been mentored by the nominee, addressing the nature and duration of the mentoring relationship and including specific examples demonstrating the impact of the nominee's mentoring on that individual's career and academic development.

I urge you to take this opportunity to recognize someone whose mentoring made a difference for you and your colleagues.

Sincerely,

Prof. Christopher S. Celenza
Vice Provost for Faculty Affairs
